Amanda captivates her audience with her bright imagery and bold details. Born in Falls Church, Virginia, just outside of Washington D.C., Amanda was influenced by exploring the Smithsonian museums, the National Zoo, and the outdoors. As a primarily self-taught artist, she paints with a unique interpretation of nature in her own colorful style and composition.

She received the highest honors at her first art exhibition in 2005 at George C. Marshall High School. Earning top scores in Art and Biology, she graduated as valedictorian of her class with an International Baccalaureate degree. Upon graduation, she attended Virginia Tech, George Mason University, and Georgetown University. Earning a bachelor's and Master of Science Degree in Biological Sciences, she went on to teach in higher education.

She values informal self-education, surrounding herself with remarkable people, do-it-yourself projects, and creative experimentation. Amanda relocated to Florida in 2016, where she found inspiration in the natural beauty of her new environment. With her passion for art and background in biology she often brings exacting details of the subjects in her paintings and infuses them with color, a unique style appreciated by collectors worldwide.
